

How EHS teams can reduce the cost of non-compliance

ehs intelligence

The high costs of non-compliance

Large sums are spent each year on fines, penalties, legal effort and excessive insurance costs. The true cost of non-compliance can also have huge operational and productivity impact, and while these points are beyond the scope of this study, compliance professionals looking to drive change could consider them as part of any business case.

Customers cited sources for reduced cost of non-compliance with Enhesa as:

How Enhesa can help

Prior to using Enhesa we had certain factories which received fines and found that we were not compliant against 10% of laws we should have been. We've been able to close that to less than 1%

Global Head H&S, global manufacturer

Enhesa contributed to a 50% fine reduction in five years and improved regulator relationships. Insurance costs also dropped as compliance improvements reassured insurers, saving millions

UK HSES&S Manager, multinational industrial and consumer goods company

Non-compliance cost savings according to our customers

A trusted partner in Enhesa Expert Services

Health and safety compliance has been a huge and important subject. Working with Enhesa and having their oversight has added a lot of value.

Global EHS Manager, tobacco company

Reduce exposure and potential fines

Enhesa can help you with regulatory compliance, reducing your exposure and potential fines. Our H&S fines were ~$50K per fine, and we reduced the frequency of these from using Enhesa.

Director SSHE Europe, multinational FMCG company

Improved compliance for reduced safety hazards

Enhesa led to an improvement in compliance levels and this contributed to an overall impact of a 5-8% reduction in injuries over time.

Director, Health and Safety, industrial and consumer good company

Reduction in legal fees

Legal fees dropped 10% in 2024, partly due to improved compliance.
