

Sources for savings: Why compliance confidence delivers ROI

ehs intelligence

How Enhesa EHS Intelligence offers business benefits to industry-leading companies

Sources for time-saving

EHS teams can reduce time spent in...

-  Finding and confirming applicability of multiple regulatory sources
-  Maintaining different tracking methods by facility and checking they're up-to-date
-  Tracking and reporting on global compliance status, while reconciling disjointed methods and data sources

15-20% improvements in EHS efficiency

Deliver efficiency gains with better EHS regulatory intelligence features

-  Single source of truth for every EHS requirement — global, national, and local
-  Applicability visibility, narrowing broad scopes to actionable requirements by facility
-  Accessibility even for non-experts, with EHS insights authored by legal and regional experts
-  Regulatory change alerts so teams can reassess compliance applicability
-  Global compliance status and gap tracking to quickly surface issues requiring action

 A centralized compliance approach has reduced time spent by senior management on reporting. They can now focus on execution and strategy instead of chasing different KPIs.

reduction in the cost of non-compliance

Enhesa contributed to a 50% fine reduction in five years and improved regulator relationships. Insurance costs also dropped as compliance improvements reassured insurers, saving millions.

Sources for compliance risks

When EHS teams “don’t know what they don’t know”, risks can mount, like...

Hidden issues

when teams don’t know they have a compliance gap

Unknown applicability

when teams don’t know a regulation applies

Revised regulations

when a regulatory change comes into effect unseen and unprepared for

How EHS regulatory intelligence helps teams manage the risk of non-compliance

Risk management for all facilities

See across the global organization and drill down by facility to target and remedy non-compliances

Change management

Get change notifications before they come into force, fully searchable and timed

Strategic global compliance priority management

Quickly see common gaps and areas of weakness, and deploy compliance standards and remediation programs globally, gaining economies of scale

25-30%

cost reduction through supplier consolidation

Using Enhesa reduced our dependency on local advisors, saving us ~30% through centralization and consolidation.

Sources for cost-savings

Multiple compliance solutions and service providers lead to cost and inefficiency increases, redundant work, and more chances for error...

High vendor management costs from maintaining multiple, redundant point-solutions and region-specific tools at each site or facility

Periodic or ad hoc local service partners increase costs while decreasing internal access to and global visibility of data, increasing compliance risks

One global source for content, technology, and expert services

Reduce costs while improving teams' ability to "own their data" and keep track of global compliance status

Action EHS requirements: Easily search, save, and set applicability and status for compliance or action needed, tagging colleagues to collaborate and close-the-loop on next steps

Democratize compliance data so any user can access EHS requirements and compliance status, site-by-site or globally, allowing visibility of any gaps or issues and ownership

Leverage our industry experts, with knowledge in regulations and the technology, to augment and scale your team when you need them, while retaining visibility and ownership of your company's data of senior stakeholders report increased trust in their company's EHS data

“ Before Enhesa, the global management team did not have much visibility of all the regulations before, but now we have the full picture everywhere. ”

Trust breaks down where confidence is lacking

Taking too long to find stakeholder-required compliance data, or data that's inaccessible, inaccurate, incomplete, or uncertain, erodes trust in internal and external relationships...

Internal stakeholders lose confidence when their teams can't quickly and accurately report on compliance status

External stakeholders rely on compliance to be well-understood and managed by the company — including regulators, supply chain partners, investors, customers, or other third-parties

Individual employees, consumers, and board members lose confidence with regulatory lapses, leading to reputational damage, customer churn, and other long-term impacts

Businesses change for the better with high EHS confidence

When EHS compliance confidence is high and non-compliance risks are well-managed...

Senior leaders can find compliance data and report on it to the highest level of the organization within minutes or hours, not days or weeks

Audits aren't guessing games; they're confirmation of compliance while flagging known issues being actioned, eliminating costly surprises

Customer and partner relationships are enhanced when leaders can confidently report on global, national, and local compliance with efficiency and accuracy

Consumers trust the transparency, leading to a secure reputation in the market and protecting against fallout from high-profile non-compliance, safety issues, or regulatory action

Investors can rely on business longevity: Companies that demonstrate a clear plan stay profitable by addressing any future regulatory changes that may come

 Stronger compliance made us a preferred partner, attracting more business and internal investment.
